Neither ISO 31000 nor COSO are designed for an organization to get a compliance certification. ISO 31000 especially is meant to provide high-level guidance on the components of a risk management framework. As I frequently mention, risk management should be tailored to each organization, so it makes sense that the standards are really guidelines. It is your responsibility to take the “standard” and put it into practice, making sure it fits the needs and culture of your organization.
